

Meeting: Weekly Growth x Product Marketing sync

Date: April 2, 2026

Attendees:

- Priya Nair -- Product Marketing Manager, Intuit Enterprise Suite
- Marcus Webb -- Growth Marketing Lead
- Dana Kowalski -- Lifecycle/Email Marketing Manager
- Jordan Reyes -- Paid Media Manager

[This is an example/fixture transcript for testing the document-update-brand-check skill -- not a record of a real meeting. It intentionally mixes an actionable website-change discussion with unrelated topics (email, paid) so the skill's extraction step has real filtering to do.]

-----

[00:00] Marcus: Okay, recording's on. Thanks for hopping on, I know it's back-to-back day for everyone. Let's get through this -- three things on the agenda: the professional services page refresh off the spring release, the email sequence, and Jordan's paid numbers. Priya, you want to kick us off?

[00:32] Priya: Yeah, sure. So spring release notes went out last week -- a lot landed, but the stuff I think actually matters for professional services prospects is pretty narrow. I don't think we need to boil the ocean here.

[00:51] Marcus: Agreed, that page is already pretty dense. What's the short list?

[01:04] Priya: Three things, really. Multi-Entity Command Center -- that's the centralized workflow view across entities. Then the dimensions work, specifically the "Enhanced Reporting with Dimensions" piece where you can group and filter report columns by dimension. And Peer Benchmarking -- comparing your numbers against similar firms by industry, revenue band, location. That last one I think is actually the most compelling for this audience, professional services firms are obsessed with "am I performing like my peers."

[01:52] Dana: Sorry, quick clarifying question before we go further -- is this the live site or the .page preview we're talking about?

[02:01] Priya: The real page is main--intuit-erp--aem.sites.aem.page/professional-services, that's the one we'd be editing and then publish for real.

[02:14] Marcus: Got it. Okay so -- Priya, where on the page were you thinking this goes?

[02:20] Priya: Right now under the hero there's the "What changes when the system finally works" testimonial, then "Deliver projects on time and on budget" with the three icon columns -- engineering and design, management consulting, legal services. I don't want to touch that section, it's doing fine. I think we add a new section right after it, before the FAQ, specifically about the spring capabilities. Something like "Built for how professional services firms actually run" as the heading, then the three things I mentioned as a row of features -- Command Center, dimensional reporting, and peer benchmarking.

[03:15] Marcus: Makes sense. Do we have real numbers for peer benchmarking yet, or is it too early?

[03:22] Priya: Too early, we don't have anything I'd sign off on publicly yet. Let's keep that one descriptive -- what it does, not a specific stat -- until we have a number we trust.

[03:41] Dana: What about the FAQ? Some of those answers already mention "15 new reports" and "up to 20 dimensions" -- are those still accurate or did they change with this release?

[03:58] Priya: Good catch, I need to double check the reports count against the actual release notes before anyone touches that copy -- don't want to just bump the number without verifying it. Let's leave the FAQ alone for now and revisit it as a follow-up, not part of this pass.

[04:22] Marcus: Okay. So to play it back -- new section, after the icon-columns block, before FAQ, three capabilities: Multi-Entity Command Center, dimension-based reporting, peer benchmarking descriptive-only. FAQ stays untouched this round. Anything else on that page specifically?

[04:49] Priya: That's it for the page. I'll get you the exact capability descriptions by end of day tomorrow so whoever's building it has real copy, not placeholder text.

[05:03] Marcus: Perfect, let's move on. Dana, where are we on the email side?

[05:10] Dana: So the spring release nurture track -- I've got a three-email sequence drafted. Email one is the announcement, broad strokes across all the release areas. Email two I want to split by segment, construction gets the WIP reporting and job costing stuff, professional services gets the dimensions and benchmarking angle Priya just described. Email three is a "book a demo" close.

[05:47] Marcus: What's the send cadence looking like?

[05:51] Dana: Thinking Tuesday, then following Tuesday, then the Friday after that. I want at least four business days between one and two so it doesn't feel like a blast.

[06:08] Priya: No objection from me on the cadence. Can you send me email two's draft once it's ready so I can sanity check the professional services framing lines up with whatever we end up shipping on the page?

[06:20] Dana: Yep, will do. Separately -- subject line testing. I want to A/B "Your books just got a command center" against something more literal like "What's new in Intuit Enterprise Suite this spring." Marcus, any strong opinion?

[06:44] Marcus: I like testing both, no strong pull either way. Just make sure whichever wins, we're not promising something in the subject line that isn't in the email.

[06:55] Dana: Fair, noted.

[07:02] Marcus: Okay, Jordan -- paid.

[07:07] Jordan: Yeah so a couple things. LinkedIn CPCs crept up again this month, we're about 12% over where we were in February for the same audience. I want to shift about 15% of that budget over to the Google campaigns since those are converting better right now.

[07:34] Marcus: Do it. What about the professional services audience specifically, are we running anything targeted there right now?

[07:43] Jordan: We have a LinkedIn campaign targeting title + firm size for consulting and legal, it's been flat for a few weeks. I'd like to refresh the creative once the new page section is live so the ad and landing experience actually match -- right now if someone clicks through they land on a page that doesn't mention any of the new stuff.

[08:09] Priya: That's a good reason to get the page done first, then. I'll flag you both once it's published.

[08:15] Jordan: Appreciate it. Last thing from me -- I want to kill the retargeting campaign that's been running against people who abandoned the pricing page. Conversion on it has been basically zero for six weeks, not worth the spend.

[08:31] Marcus: Any objections to killing that one? ...Okay, hearing none, go ahead and pause it.

[08:38] Jordan: Will do today.

[08:41] Marcus: Great. Anything else before we wrap? ...Alright. Priya, capability copy by tomorrow EOD, Dana's got email two, Jordan's shifting budget and pausing the retargeting campaign. I'll drop a summary in Slack. Thanks everyone.

[09:02] -- call ends --